

About C-CAP

Careers through Culinary Arts Program (C-CAP) works with public schools across the country to prepare underserved high school students for college and career opportunities in the restaurant and hospitality industry.

A national nonprofit organization founded in 1990 by well-known culinary educator and author, Richard Grausman,

C-CAP manages the largest independent culinary scholarship program in the United States and has awarded high school students $34 million in scholarships and donated $2.7 million worth of supplies and equipment to classrooms.

C-CAP provides training and curriculum enrichment programs including: teacher training; scholarships and cooking competitions; job shadows, job training, internships, and career advising; college advising and college 101 workshop; and product donations.

In the 2010-2011 academic year, C-CAP served 235 high school teachers in 176 public schools to enhance the education and employment opportunities of the 18,640 students enrolled in their classes.

C-CAP donated $136,580 worth of supplies and equipment to the participating schools, offered college and career advising to 1,250 students, and awarded over $3 million in scholarships.

C-CAP operates programs in seven locations: New York; Los Angeles; Chicago; Philadelphia; Hampton Roads, VA; Prince George's County, Maryland; and statewide in Arizona.
